Frederick Gunn

It is the rare man who leads enslaved people to freedom and corresponds with Harriet Beecher Stowe, appears in the first known photograph of a baseball game, and is acknowledged as the founder of the American camping movement - all in addition to starting a school with a pioneering point of view about education and character development. A man of principle, Frederick Gunn was also a man of action. He was a leader of the Underground Railroad, guiding runaway enslaved people by night one step closer to Canada and freedom. His willingness to break the law in pursuit of right earned him the enmity of many. But others admired him. Mr. Gunn also welcomed the wider world to his school. He opened his arms to students who made the long ocean voyage from China, setting a precedent in 19th century, rural New England. Inclusiveness did not end there: he welcomed African American and Native American students as well. Girls from Washington and nearby towns took lessons, which was uncommon at the time. This guest lecture is being co-sponsored by the Gunn Historical Museum and The Frederick Gunn School.

ABOUT THE LECTURERS:

Peter Becker became The Frederick Gunn School's 11th Head of School in 2012. A native of New Orleans and Manhattan, Peter attended The Taft School and earned a bachelor's degree with distinction in religious studies from the University of Virginia and a master's degree in history from Yale University. Over the course of eight years, he served as a master of history and interdisciplinary studies, housemaster, department chair, and coach at The Lawrenceville School. Prior to that, he was on the national staff of the Fellowship of Christians in Universities and Schools and had a career as an investment banking and venture capital analyst.

Emily Gum is the Assistant Head of School for Teaching and Learning at The Frederick Gunn School. A graduate of The Hill School, Gum received an undergraduate degree in international relations and theological studies from the University of St. Andrews in Scotland, graduating with honors, and a Master of Philosophy in theology and religion, passing with distinction, from the University of Oxford. She is currently working toward a Doctor of Philosophy in ethics from the University of Oxford based on her dissertation, "Neighbors, Virtues, and Schools as Civic Spaces."

Bart McMann is the Director of the Center for Citizenship and Just Democracy, a member of the History Department faculty and former History Department Chair at The Frederick Gunn School. A Massachusetts native, McMann attended The Roxbury Latin School in Boston and holds a bachelor's degree in government and legal studies from Bowdoin College and a master's degree in social sciences from Wesleyan University. Aside from teaching and coaching, he is a Connecticut State Coordinator for Braver Angels, a citizens' organization that seeks to unite red and blue Americans in a working alliance to depolarize America.
